

STOP STEALING THIRD WORLD NURSES!

Labour is plundering Africa and Asia for health workers

LIKE SOME CALLOUS colonial power, the Labour Government is plundering the Third World of its skilled nurses in a last desperate bid to stave off the collapse of the NHS.

Cut price nursing is needed to keep afloat our once fine National Health Service which is now being abused by over two million people who haven't paid a penny in contributions, yet whose ever-increasing demands are pushing our hospitals to the brink.

On October 9th, Percy Mahlati, the Deputy Director-General of the South African Department of Health, protested that Britain's National Health Service was still stealing his country's nurses, despite promising 5 years ago to stop such recruitment. But Britain's privatised NHS Trusts have weaselled out of their promise by saying that they only meant they wouldn't recruit directly from Third World countries. What the Trusts are doing now is letting private agencies do their dirty work. The agencies poach the nurses, then the NHS hire them from the agencies claiming they are just agency staff! The latest figures from the Nursing and Midwifery Council show that more than 2,800 nurses and midwives from countries we supposedly promised to stop poaching from, were registered to practise in the UK in the year ending March 2005.

It's not surprising that these nurses were glad to be poached. An experienced theatre nurse earns just £7,000 a year in South Africa and even less in many of the poorer nations whose nurses we are poaching. But the real cost is paid by the people who they leave behind in their own countries, many of whom die as a result of want for proper medical care.

Stealing the best people from Third World countries, not just nurses but doctors and other professionals leaves the rest of the people in those countries to suffer. It is morally, as well as politically and economically, wrong. The influx into Britain of economic migrants and health tourists threatens the very existence of the NHS. This has to stop. Just as our Government has to stop stealing the best skilled people from the Third World.

Britain doesn't need them. Our National Health Service can survive and prosper if it just needs to look after the health care of those people whose families have been contributing to its upkeep for generations. Our health service would just be staffed by British doctors and nurses, enabling Third World workers to return home to look after the people who need their help most.

Needed over there, so why are they over here?

FILIPINO NURSES: Hospitals in Manila have been forced to close because of lack of nurses, but that hasn't stopped East Sussex Hospitals NHS Trust plundering another 32 much-needed nurses from the Philippines to work with the 70 Filipino nurses already here at the Trust's Conquest Hospital.

One-in-four Londoners for the BNP

NEW RESEARCH has found that support for the British National Party in London is on the increase with 23% of Londoners considering voting BNP.

Professor Helen Margetts of Oxford University, a member of the team that carried out the research for the Joseph Rowntree Reform Trust, said:

"The British National Party has entered the mainstream of London politics. Last year the BNP narrowly missed gaining a seat in the London Assembly, losing by only a handful of votes."

Another of the researchers, Professor Peter John of Manchester University, pointed out that, in London, forty seats could be vulnerable to a BNP swing of less than 5 per cent with Barking, Dagenham and Epping the key areas.

The researchers also found that in London the British National Party attracted votes specifically from older, working-class voters who had turned to the BNP because they felt betrayed by the Labour Party.

Labour told to stop BNP before it's too late

ACCORDING to London Mayor, Ken Livingstone, the British National Party is now "in a similar position to France's Front National of 20 years ago."

It was then that Monsieur Le Pen's Front National succeeded in pushing the Socialist candidate into third in presidential polls and establishing the Front National as a credible, mainstream political force.

Livingstone is calling for vigilance against the growing political stature of the British National Party.

LIVINGSTONE: Wants Tony Blair's help to halt the progress of the BNP.

Of particular concern to him is how this growth might be fuelled by the increasing belief in British and other western societies that a "clash of civilisations" (between the Muslim world and the democratic, predominantly Christian West) is inevitable. He warned that if this idea was allowed to develop in society, it would present opportunities to the BNP.

London's Mayor told the Government it must redouble its efforts to halt the British National Party's progress, before it is too late!

Labour behind moves to bar BNP members from the Fire Service

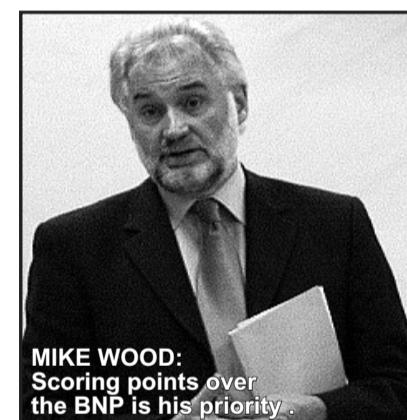

Fire chief blows the gaff on bully Prescott

JOHN PRESCOTT and the Labour Party have been exposed as being the driving force behind moves to get British National Party members barred from jobs in the Fire Service.

The Deputy Prime Minister's involvement in the campaign, described by civil liberty groups as epitomising the worst aspects of the McCarthy witchhunts of 1950's America, was only revealed when one Fire Authority refused to bow to OOPS: Fire Chief, Martin Chapman, went to the papers before checking with his Fire Authority.

MIKE WOOD: Scoring points over the BNP is his priority.

HECKMONDWIKE Councillor David Exley, is building up a local reputation as someone who will stand up for the rights of the underdog and work hard for those in his community.

So it wasn't that surprising when a local school in the neighbouring ward was earmarked for closure, parents, residents and local campaigners asked him to get involved and help keep it open. R.M. Grylls school on the Windy Bank estate is a lovely little school. With just over 180 pupils, for the last sixty years it has built a fantastic reputation for high standards, good discipline and producing confident children.

It therefore came as a huge shock to all when the Liberal Democrat council put plans in place to close it and move all the pupils to a neighbouring school.

When Councillor Exley was asked if he would help in the campaign to keep the school open and attend a meeting, where parents, school officials and John Prescott's bullying. Members of Dorset Fire Authority had been advised by their Chief Fire Officer, Martin Chapman, that members of the BNP should be barred from jobs in the Fire Service.

But the Fire Authority rejected the advice citing it as ". . . totally inappropriate to single out one political party in this way. It is the right of any individual to stand up and speak whether one agrees with his views or not."

But the Chief Fire Officer warned that his instructions came from the highest level "in the form of policy from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister". He said:

"We would not have been the first fire authority in the country to issue this statement. As a Fire Authority you need to understand that and you might find yourselves having to revisit this issue."

The persecution of individuals because they belong to a political party was also condemned by the civil rights organisation Liberty and Law. Martin Chapman's revelation that John Prescott is behind this campaign to hit BNP members in the workplace is further proof of the extent the Labour Party will go to silence its opponents.

MUGABE'S MATE: Prescott seems to be following the example of the president of Zimbabwe when dealing with opposition politicians.

Meet Mullah Mike - Yet another Labour Party bully exposed local people could discuss the issues facing the school's future, he said he would be delighted.

When the Labour MP for Batley, Mike Wood, heard that the BNP councillor was going to be attending the meeting, he said he wouldn't come and the school had to decide between their MP or a local councillor.

The Batley MP, who is known by his constituents as 'Mullah' Mike due to his constant fawning over the Muslim community, showed he wasn't the slightest bit interested in helping the school stay open, only in scoring political points against the BNP. David Exley, who does care about the school being kept open said he wouldn't attend the meeting if it was going to cause problems.

But Nick Cass, the BNP's Yorkshire Regional Organiser did attend and he told the audience about Mike Wood's threats and disgraceful behaviour. Parents and teachers alike were dismayed by their MP's attitude and this was compounded when Wood refused to discuss the subject.

After Nick Cass had set the record straight, David Exley was inundated with phone calls from parents, thanking him for sending someone to confirm his support and asking him to help save their school.

INFORMED: Parents and teachers at RM Grylls school are told about their MP's behaviour.

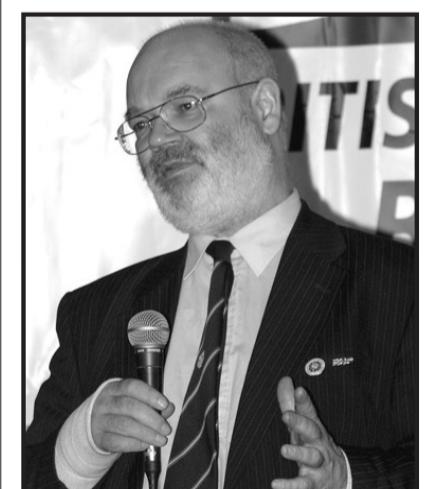

Childish TUC leaflet recruits for the BNP

A TUC leaflet campaign against a British National Party Bradford City councillor has spectacularly backfired and ended up actually recruiting for the BNP. It was a rather childish, but still a nasty leaflet put out by the TUC against BNP councillor Jim Lewthwaite in his Wyke constituency and it upset one local resident, George Walker. He wrote to Freedom:

"I am neither a BNP member nor did I vote BNP in the election, in fact I didn't vote at all. However, since Mr Lewthwaite was voted in, he has at least shown an interest in local affairs and has been to my door in person on at least two occasions, something unheard of by any of the usual political parties in the previous six years I have lived here."

"I find it quite sinister that the TUC sees fit to promote itself as the Political Party Police and resort to such methods to try to discredit a chap who in my opinion is doing more than any other to look after the interests of the people of Wyke."

"I assume that as the TUC has funded the Labour Party for many years it now sees itself as a part of the Labour Party and free to use its members' funds to fight the BNP instead of concentrating on its main purpose - protecting its members rights in the workplace."

JIM LEWTHWAITE: "Doing more than any other to look after the interests of the people of Wyke."

Tories oppose fairer voting

PLANS for fairer elections have been slammed by the Tories because it will benefit the BNP.

The Electoral Commission wants to make it easier for the £500 deposit to be saved at a parliamentary election by dropping the percentage of the vote needed from 5% to 2%.

But Conservative spokesman Oliver Heald, says the bill would have saved the BNP £36,500 in this year's General Election.

He also pointed out that the amount of money that the BNP would have saved under the new law would have allowed it to nominate candidates in a further 73 constituencies.

The credit card time bomb starts to tick

Barclaycard hikes rate by 2% to meet bad debts

BACK IN July, Freedom warned in its front page story that Britain was facing a debt disaster. We explained that the British people were closing their minds to the political problems this country was facing and they could do this thanks to the availability of unlimited credit. A little bit of retail therapy could quickly alleviate concerns over Islamic terrorists, migrant workers, and British jobs being offshore to India. But now that credit card time bomb has started to tick with the announcement from Barclaycard at the beginning of October that it is hiking its interest rate by 2%. The UK's biggest credit card provider, which has more than nine million customers across Britain, said it had been forced to raise rates because Britain's borrowing culture was out of control with consumers currently owing over £1 TRILLION in mortgage payments, credit card bills and other loans.

Freedom also predicted that an increasing number of people would not be able to keep up with their loan repayments. This has proved correct with in the first six months of this year alone, banks being forced to write off £2.7 billion of bad debt, an increase of almost 40% from last year.

For the last seven years, thanks to unlimited credit, a majority of the British people have disengaged from the political system and turned inwards, just living for the present. The credit card time bomb will provide the wake-up call needed to show the electorate just what a disaster New Labour has been for this country.

SCRAPPED: New Deal gave all the unemployed a chance to re-train, but now Labour wants to focus on 'people with English as a second language.'

Training scheme cut as Labour prioritise courses for migrants

By Tina Wingfield

A SERIES of Treasury budget cuts to JobCentrePlus services have left New Labour's highly trumpeted 'New Deal' job creation programme in crisis.

Budget squeezing has forced some of the major New Deal training providers - charged by the Government with helping the growing numbers of unemployed people into work - to suspend job creation schemes. This means that thousands of unemployed young people will be refused places on training schemes and condemned to long-term life on the dole.

Commenting on the training programme suspension, a spokeswoman for the Government Department responsible for New Deal, pointed out that while services that 'no longer met priorities' had been cut, New Deal 'mandatory courses' and those 'for people with English as a second language' would continue to run.

Labour's evident confusion over what constitutes a 'priority' in terms of training Britain's workforce was highlighted when, just three days after it emerged that his Treasury Department wouldn't fund its own New Deal programmes, the Chancellor declared that Britain must raise its game in skills and education if it is to compete with an emerging new global economy.

Referring to the rise of Asian economies, Gordon Brown warned: "Half the world's manufacturing is going to be done in developing countries in a few years' time and, if Britain is to succeed against the frightening range of competition facing our industries and services in every part of the country, . . . we will have to upgrade our skills."

Given New Labour's past record on protecting the British workforce, it should come as no surprise that the Chancellor's answer to this impending threat from foreign competition is to prioritise language services for our ever-expanding non-English-speaking population at the expense of vital training programmes for British youngsters.

It's the sort of racist murder the BBC isn't interested in covering

WHEN is the BBC not interested in covering a racist murder?

When the attackers are three Muslim thugs and the victim is white.

The three men stamped and kicked a computer worker to death on a university campus before declaring "we killed a white man".

Christopher Yates, 30, a data inputter, had just seen his girlfriend onto a bus to make sure she got home safely after going out for her birthday when he was then set upon in the car park of Barking's University of East London by Zahid Bashir, 23, Imran Maqsood, 21 and Sajid Zulfiqar, 25, who each deny murder.

If Christopher Yates had been Black and his three assailants White, BBC reporters and camera crews would be camped outside the Old Bailey making sure the trial headlined the news each evening.

But as it is, it's not the sort of racist murder the BBC likes to highlight in case it raises public awareness that racism can cut both ways.

One ethnic minority is dying out in Peckham

THE LONE English child left in this class at Peckham's Oliver Goldsmith Primary School provides a stark illustration of the demise of the White population in the London borough of Southwark.

New population figures for the area show just how much immigration has changed the face of this part of our capital city.

In Peckham over the last ten years the immigrant population has grown by 54% and in Camberwell Green it has grown by 56%. Worrying figures in their own right but nothing compared to the rise in the immigrant population of North Southwark by 130% or Bermondsey by 154%.

And as the population changes so the history of the area is re-written to accommodate that change. Southwark councillor Columba Blang, was surprised that the new figures were even newsworthy. He told the Southwark News:

"Southwark is one of the most culturally and ethnically diverse boroughs in the country with a rich mix of communities that go back many centuries. It's therefore natural that so many people from other countries are continuing to make our borough their home."

Unfortunately for revisionists like Blang, this 'go back many centuries' claim can be easily undermined by a photograph of the Peek Freans biscuit factory in Bermondsey in 1947 where every single worker is White.

BERMONDSEY: Workers at the Peek Freans factory in 1947 are all White.

Whites a minority in Leicester secondary schools

WHITE British children are now a minority in secondary schools in Leicester, making up 48% against the other 52% of pupils from India, Pakistan and Africa.

The complete breakdown is:

White British	47.8%
Indian	31.0%
Other Asian	5.9%
Black	5.8%
Mixed	5.0%
Pakistani	2.5%
Others	2.0%

In individual schools only 3.2% of pupils at the Moat Community School are White British but at the New College in Leicester there is a much more healthy 86.3%.

Figures for the city's primary schools are again expected to show White British in the minority due to the recent influx of children seeking asylum and the high rate of Indian births in Leicester.

Leaving the UK to escape the multicultural society

THE number of Britons leaving the United Kingdom has reached levels not seen since the assisted passage to Australia era after the last war.

Today, for the first time in our history we have over 1,000,000 retired Britons living abroad with most in France and Spain, and these Brits are being joined by another 240,000 UK citizens of all ages each year.

The reasons given for leaving in such numbers are varied with Britain's inclement weather only partly to blame for the exodus.

Most people seeking a new life abroad cite over-crowding and Britain's multicultural society as the main reason for leaving.

There'll be hell to pay if Muslims can't pray

The residents of London Colney, near St Albans, have been stunned by an application to turn the betting office in the High Street into a mosque and Islamic centre for Bangladeshi Muslims.

Villagers met at their local pub to voice their worries that a mosque on the corner of Seaton Road would cause high levels of disruption to the local community in terms of noise and traffic.

120 attended the meeting and were told that the building was already owned by the London Colney Bangladeshi (LCB) Islamic Centre and that work had already started even though planning permission had still to be granted.

Tafiq Lodhi, president of the local branch of the UK Islamic Mission, said that he would be taking the council to court if it stopped people being able to pray together. He said: "Ramadan begins on November 6 and if we have nowhere to pray by then there will be hell to pay."

BBC admits to 200 initiatives to put minorities first BRITAIN'S television newsrooms are too white and positive discrimination in favour of ethnic minority presenters is needed to redress this balance.

That's according to David Mannion, the editor-in-chief of ITV news, who said he would like to see more Indian and Pakistani newsreaders, perhaps wearing a sari or a hijab.

The ITV news head said change was happening "too slowly" and claimed that the lack of diversity had an impact on reporting, particularly during coverage of the London terror attacks in July.

The BBC's head of news gathering, Fran Unsworth, agreed. She said the corporation had tried TWO HUNDRED positive discrimination initiatives in the last ten years, but finding suitable Black and Asian staff was still proving difficult.

Asians only Exclusive swimming pool still gets lottery funding

A NEW £100,000 swimming pool for Asians only in High Wycombe is getting funding from the National Lottery despite the fact it breaches Lottery funding guidelines on not being 'inclusive'.

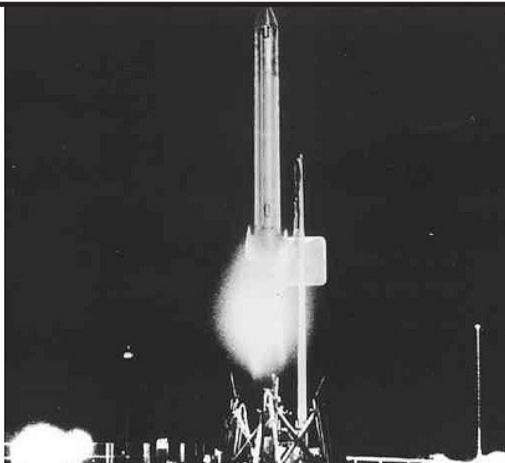

The pool is being planned for the Millbrook School in Sands and any shortfall from the lottery grant will be made up by Bucks County Council using council taxpayers' money.

Rick Durrant, managing director of Wycombe Leisure Ltd, which is also involved in the project, said the area's ethnic population needed their own pool because many Asians felt they couldn't swim in public pools.

The pool will also only have Asian swimming instructors and lifeguards.

JULY 7th 1958: The British Black Knight rocket was launched becoming the highest-performing rocket in the world with regular forays into space from Britain's world-class launch facility at Woomera in the Australian desert.

Labour & Tory failure written in our skies

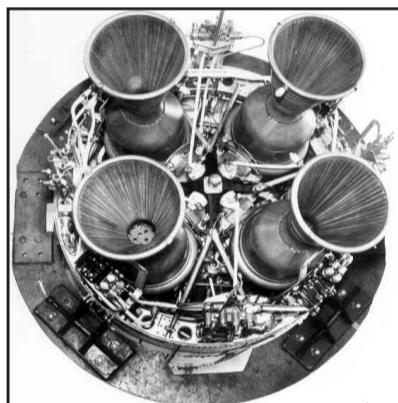

After putting two astronauts into orbit last month, "China, once again, has demonstrated that it is among the elite number of countries capable of human space flight."

That was how American Space Agency NASA boss, Michael Griffin, so succinctly put it. This 'elite' consists of Russia, the United States, and, since their first manned space flight in 2003, China. It doesn't include Britain, nor is it likely to in the future.

But things could have been very different. When the Space Age dawned in 1957, Britain was in the same technological league as the Americans and Russians, whilst the Chinese were a primitive Third World tyranny propped up by the Soviets. The British Black Knight rocket was first launched on July 7th, 1958, and by October 1959 the sixth launch had reached an altitude of 455 miles, considerably higher than that at which the International, (in reality, American) Space Station now orbits. Black Knight was, for a while, the highest-performing rocket in the world.

Britain had a world-class launch facility at Woomera in the Australian desert, and the thunder of rocket motor tests echoed across the English Channel from the High Downs static test site on the Isle of Wight.

BLACK KNIGHT: An engine capable of 21,600lbs thrust on launch and developed by a British motor manufacturer, Armstrong Siddeley.

But successive Governments, Tory, Labour and Tory again, as usual where British brain power was concerned, lacked the vision to back the potential of British engineers and scientists. Projects were cut back, axed and cancelled again and again. As late as the mid-1960's the official view was that satellites - now a multi-billion-pound a year business - would never amount to anything worthwhile. So the British satellite launcher project was cancelled - although the left-over Black Arrow hardware was used anyway to launch the one all-British satellite in 1971. What was left of our space programme was then swallowed by the European Launcher Development Organisation.

So, as with computers, supersonic and passenger jets, the technological leadership of the world, reached for with every prospect of success by British brains, was allowed to slip from our fingers during decade after decade of decline, under both Labour and Tory governments.

Now today, a country which didn't even have an air force when Britain first reached beyond the sky, can send men into space while we no longer have the capability.

Repairs go private

THE Defence Aviation Repair Agency (DARA), the world-class military jet aircraft repair agency based in Wales, is to close with the loss of 1,400 jobs.

The Government's decision to move the maintenance of military jets out of the £80 million facility near Cardiff, is a disaster for the workforce and the taxpayers who funded the plant.

The MoD is shifting the work to the private sector as a short term measure to cut costs. This completely undermines the whole concept of DARA which was to ensure that market testing of the work was carried out, that it would be done by a specialist workforce efficiently and at the best price.

Now it's our national flag that is racist

TIE-PINS supporting a cancer charity have been slammed as racist because they display England's national flag.

The Chief Inspector of Prisons, Anne Owers, was horrified when she saw the St George's Cross tie-pins being worn by prison officers during a visit to Wakefield Prison.

In her report she said that the cancer charity tie-pins could be 'misinterpreted' by inmates from the ethnic minorities as a racist symbol, and that she wanted the prison management to ban officers from wearing them.

It may cause offence

A FIRE crew were hauled across the coals after they displayed a St George's flag badge on the back of their fire engine.

Deputy Chief Fire Officer of Wiltshire & Swindon Fire Authority, Eugene Johnson, ordered the badge to be removed from the back of the fire engine whilst on a visit to a Swindon fire Station because he was worried it might cause offence to members of the ethnic minorities living in Swindon.

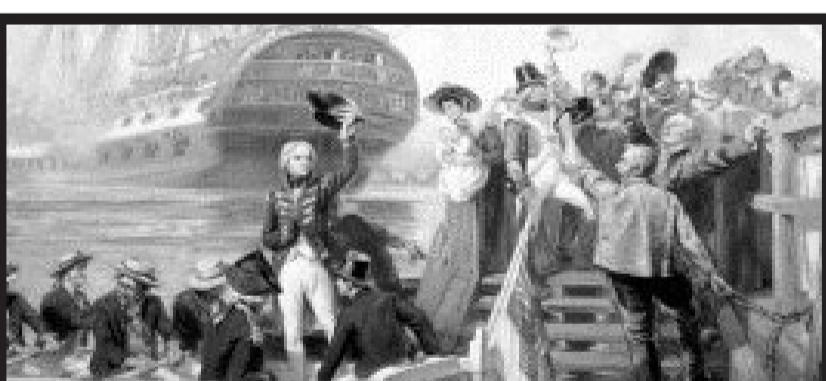

In neither case were the Prison Officers' Union or the Fire Brigade Union prepared to stand up for their members' right to display their national flag. Apparently it's OK to wear a ribbon to show solidarity with Islam, but not a symbol of England to show support for a cancer charity.

Pooh & piglet get the chop

WINNIE the Pooh and Piglet tissues boxes have been banned from a council office in case they offend Muslim staff.

Workers in the benefits department at Dudley Council, West Midlands, were told to remove the tissue boxes after a complaint.

Muslims are told not to eat pork by the Koran and consider pigs unclean. Councillor Mahbubur Rahman, backed the ban. He said that staff must be tolerant of other religions."

Now the Turks want to invade Europe - AGAIN

by Steve Johnson

FOR THE third time in the last five centuries, the Turks are threatening to invade Europe. Only this time the rulers of Europe are inviting them in.

The decision in Luxembourg on October 4th to let Turkey start negotiations to join the European Union - a procedure which so far has always ended in the country concerned being allowed to join - opens the way for over 70 million Muslim Turks to flood into Europe.

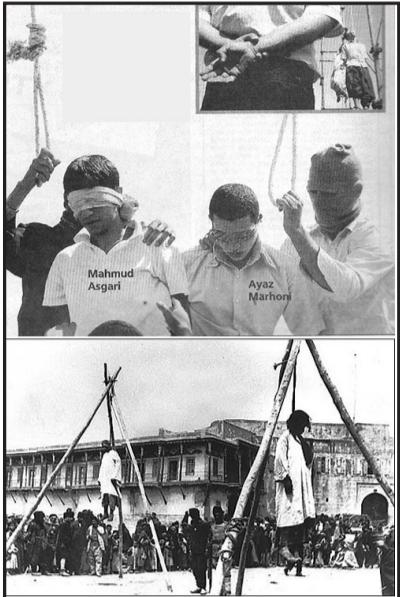

The decision by the European Union Foreign Ministers, led by Britain's Jack Straw, to let Turkey 'join Europe' flies in the face of the facts of geography and culture and the clear wishes of the citizens of all the current EU member states.

Turkey is not a European country geographically as 95% of its territory is in Asia. The 5% in Europe consists of Eastern Thrace and the ancient European city of Constantinople, the only bit of the former Turkish Ottoman conquests in Eastern Europe not yet to be restored to its rightful owners.

Turkey is not a European country religiously having brutally slaughtered and ethnically cleansed its Christian minorities in 1915 and 1923 it is now entirely Islamic, and ruled by the Islamist AK party.

Turkey is not a European country culturally because the Turks speak the language of the Central Asian barbarians who overran the formerly Greek-speaking Asia Minor after invading it in 1071.

Turkey is not a European country politically as after centuries of vicious, corrupt and decadent rule by its Sultans, the current Turkish Republic was established by the quasi-fascist dictator, Kemal Ataturk, 80 years ago. Since then the country has alternated between rule by corrupt politicians and military dictatorships. Army coups have been frequent, and only the threat of another military coup has stopped the current elected Islamist regime from introducing sharia law.

TURKEY 2005 & 1915: Ninety years ago the Turks were publicly hanging Armenian nationalists. Today they are publicly hanging petty criminals.

Turkey is not a European country judicially as its legal system has for decades been a byword for brutality and corruption, and despite some recent cosmetic touches to keep Brussels happy until it gets EU membership, the country is far from civilized in its standards of freedom. When the Islamic Turkish hordes were last battering on the gates of Europe, in 1529 and 1683, it was the Austrians who heroically beat them back from the gates of Vienna. This time too, Austria stood alone, her government supported by over 80% of the Austrian people, in defying Brussels and standing up to the Turks.

But last time, the rest of Europe came to her aid. When Vienna was about to fall in 1683, Jan Sobieski, King of Poland, arrived in the nick of time with virtually the whole of his army, leaving Poland undefended, saving the day and saving Europe.

This time the rest of Europe shamefully kowtowed to the Turks. The Poles sat on their hands, whilst most disgracefully of all it was Britain who sided with Turkey in yet another pathetic Tony Blair bid to curry favour with Muslim voters in Britain. In the end gallant little Austria was forced to back down and the gates of Europe were thrown open to the hordes of Asia.

And didn't the Turks gloat over this with their main newspaper, Hurriyet, crowing: 'Vienna has fallen: Turkey, repulsed twice in history from the gates of Vienna, now enters Europe'. In ten years at most, Turkey will be in the European Union. The Brussels' version of 'Europe' will share borders with Iraq and Syria. In twenty years, there will be a hundred million Turks, all with the right to move in and settle anywhere they like within this community. But we don't have to let them into Britain - by leaving the European Union we can halt the Turkish invasion at the English Channel.

In twenty years, there will be a hundred million Turks, all with the right to move in and settle anywhere they like within the European Union.

BATTLE OF KOSOVO POLJE 1389: 15,000 European Christians are butchered by 30,000 Muslim Turks.

British National Party WHERE WE STAND

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need and an end to field trials of genetically modified crops.

FARMING & FISHING: The regeneration of British farming, with the objective of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food. The restoration of the fishing industry through protection of our traditional fishing grounds.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

Compensation from the grave

A RACE discrimination claim against Oldham Council is to be continued from beyond the grave. An employment appeal tribunal has given the green light for a new hearing of the claim 'already rejected twice' by Mohammed Ayub, who has died since the action started.

Ayub took legal action when he failed to be shortlisted for the post of Community Safety Officer with Oldham Council and after learning that the job had gone to a White employee.

His wife will now be the beneficiary of any award of compensation if the claim is upheld.

Pans and a fan foil Britons in search of a flat

BRITISH families have been all but barred from new flats in Bristol, built with taxpayers' money, to make way for immigrant families from Pakistan.

The block in Wilson Street, which cost £2 million, has 16 flats but just two have gone to White families with the other 14 being occupied by Asians.

Despite being financed by public money through the Government and city council, the flats were specifically designed for Asian tenants to facilitate discrimination when allocating properties. A Bristol City Council spokeswoman explained:

"Where there are two households of equal priority who qualify for a flat, we would offer the flat to the family who would most benefit from its culturally-sensitive design."

This cultural sensitivity includes having toilets that do not face Mecca, powerful extractor fans in the kitchen because Asian cooking causes more condensation, and large kitchen cupboards because more pots and pans are needed preparing a meal.

Drug smuggling

THE number of Nigerian women in prison on charges of smuggling drugs into Britain has increased by 600% since 2002.

Foreign women now make up 18% of the female prison population and about 60% of them are held on drug smuggling charges.

This shift to Nigerian couriers comes two years after the outcry over the number of Jamaican female drugs mules in British jails, which climbed to more than 440 in 2002.

That number has now fallen after the drugs barons switched to Nigerian women to get their supplies of cocaine into Britain.

Trained and ready to serve their community ... but their jobs have been taken by nurses from overseas

by Tina Wingfield

September's Freedom reported that newly qualified nurses finishing their resource-intensive training in Ipswich and Hampshire, were told they had more chance of getting a job in the local supermarket than the National Health Service.

Now, another 50 nurses who trained with the North Pennine Acute Trust, which runs four hospitals in the North West of England, have been told there are no jobs available for them.

The redundant nurses launched a scathing attack on mainstream politicians who consistently bleat that Britain's NHS 'couldn't survive without foreign workers'.

They told the Bury Times that it was because so many jobs had now been filled from abroad that there were no vacancies for home-trained nurses.

It is not just British nurses that are being squeezed out of the employment market. Last month, the British Medical Association warned that unemployment was a serious threat for junior doctors due to the number of applications from overseas.

According to a survey of 276 first-year junior doctors carried out by the British Medical Association, 40% had not received a job offer. As a consequence, almost 6 out of 10 said they were considering leaving the country to seek posts elsewhere, and even worse, a third said they might abandon the profession altogether. The British Medical Association believes the answer to the problem of over-demand for jobs in the health profession is for the Government to provide the finances for more training posts.

Although this would alleviate the present dire situation for doctors and nurses in the short-term, there is only one answer to solve the problem effectively in the long-term.

It is essential that legislation is introduced to ensure that British jobs are reserved for British workers.

Privatisation is destroying our National Health Service

by Tina Wingfield

THE CRISIS state of a health system that was once the envy of the world is evident in an analysis of the NHS conducted recently by the British Medical Association.

The BMA reports that a third of NHS trusts are preparing to reduce services to avoid a debt crisis. 73% of NHS Trusts are facing a funding shortfall in the current year, almost half are proposing a recruitment freeze and a third are considering staff redundancies and bed closures.

The situation has arisen, despite unprecedented Treasury investment, because Conservative and Labour governments have rail-roaded market principles into public services. When a system operates according to business values, there has to be winners and losers. In the case of the NHS, crucial funding is being diverted away from patient care to fund bureaucratic administration systems and provide profits for greedy corporations.

The Audit Commission warned last month that Labour's new market-mimicing system of 'payment by results' is so inherently unfair that trusts will increasingly be forced to close hospital departments and cut medical staff.

It was recognition of the need to achieve equality in health care, that inspired the creation of the National Health Service in the first place. In stark contrast to the principle of a universal, needs-led public service however, the guiding principle of Labour's new competitive market is profitability. Profit is maximised where providers can pick the winners and reject the losers, and this means selecting the profitable patients and the profitable services.

Market principles destroy any chance of the NHS being a truly public service, and it's a destruction that's being hastened by the Government's policy of inviting the private sector to board the gravy train.

Health Secretary, Patricia Hewitt, said last month that she intends to sign contracts worth £3 billion for a second round of private sector treatment centres, which will entail the transfer of NHS hospitals, staff and patients to private companies. It has also emerged that Labour will allow the level of private sector involvement in NHS care to be determined by 'the market'. The scene is set for the collapse of the NHS and it is a bleak, privatised future that lies ahead for ordinary working class British citizens.

If our National Health Service is to provide equality in health care, Labour's privatisation plans must be halted. The British National Party is pledged to ensure that public services remain exactly that, 'public'.

BLEAK FUTURE:
The BMA reports almost half of NHS Trusts are proposing a freeze on recruitment and a third are considering staff redundancies and bed closures.

Labour taxes the sick but makes gamblers exempt

THE Government is taking money that should be spent on caring for the dying and seriously ill through a VAT loophole.

Sue Ryder Care, a charity which runs two hospices and two neurological care centres in Yorkshire, last year paid £500,000 in VAT which it cannot claim back because of an anomaly in the tax system.

On the basic essentials that ensure the provision of good care, such as heat, light, water, IT, telephones, running and maintaining patient transport and building services, the charity has to pay 17.5% VAT, but are not allowed to pass on that cost to primary care trusts or social services for the service they receive from the charity.

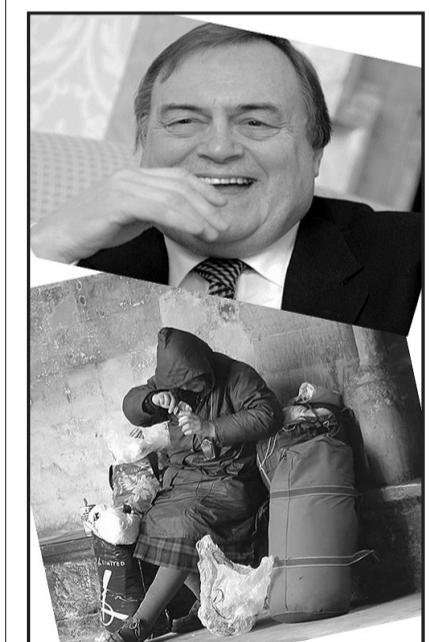

New Labour is quite happy to tax organisations that offer care to people with terminal illnesses but makes no similar VAT demands on potentially harmful activities like gambling.

Prescott helps the homeless

...if they're from an ethnic minority

THE Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, John Prescott, has launched the new Ethnic Minorities Innovation Fund (EMIF) with £3 million of taxpayers' money.

The aim of the EMIF is to support local authorities in tackling homelessness amongst their ethnic minority population.

IT'S NO LAUGHING MATTER: This homeless lady wouldn't be able to get help from the EMIF. She is excluded because she is White.

Local authorities can use the funds to research ways to reduce levels of homelessness amongst ethnic minority people, to reduce the number of ethnic minority people in temporary accommodation and to provide a more inclusive and effective homelessness service.

But the EMIF is hardly inclusive if traditional Brits are excluded. In fact, by giving money to councils with a special briefing to move ethnic minorities on council waiting lists into permanent accommodation, Prescott's new fund is particularly exclusive!

Supermarkets corral Brazilian beef to lead stampede for bigger profits

BRITAIN'S big supermarkets are pushing British farmers to the point of bankruptcy by importing foreign produce and tightening their stranglehold on the home market.

The latest scam in their stampede for bigger profits is to stack their shelves with Brazilian beef, which costs 40p per lb to produce compared with £1.20 in the UK, and then sell it at almost the same price as British beef.

The supermarkets don't care about the environmental damage being done by encouraging the trade or the animal welfare concerns being raised.

The National Beef Association has warned consumers that Brazilian beef producers do not have to conform to the same animal welfare or environmental requirements as laid down for British farmers.

BRAZILIAN BEEF: By buying it, UK consumers are encouraging further destruction of the rain forest.

An NBA spokesman told the farming lobby group 'Land & People': "The environmental and welfare targeted tick boxes, which are such a powerful element of UK farm assurance are almost non-existent." But that's not all, because Brazilian beef comes at an additional cost. Brazil's huge beef farms are expanding over land being cleared after cutting down the country's rain forest - one of the main 'lungs of the world'.

A British National Party Government would give an immediate boost to Britain's struggling beef industry by banning all imports of foreign beef. In the short term BNP councillors will be campaigning for all supermarkets to correctly label their stocks of Brazilian beef as 'NOT meeting British production standards'.

Support Britain's organic farmers

OUR countryside would benefit from organic farming methods because it is better for wildlife, causes lower pollution from sprays, produces less carbon dioxide, has high animal welfare standards and increases rural employment.

Over the last 30 years our farmland has lost half a million dormice, one-and-a-half million tree sparrows and six million skylarks due to the destruction of their habitats and the use of the 430 chemicals available in non-organic farming!

Compare that to the FOUR chemicals approved by the Soil Association for organic farming.

BNP will stem the Tesco tide

by Steve Johnson

SUPERMARKET tyrant, Tesco, has just rung up record profits as it continues to conquer our High Streets and shopping centres.

This year's first half pre-tax profits announced on September 20th were up 18.7% to £908 million, whilst Tesco's share of the grocery market is up to 30.5%.

Within five years that share is expected to reach 45%, then the superstore giant will have enough monopoly power to hike prices and squeeze shoppers who will no longer have an alternative source for food or household goods.

Tesco is ruthlessly expanding and crushing its rivals. Its market share is almost as big as its two main rivals, Asda and Sainsbury's put together, and it shows no sign of stopping.

Tesco has amassed a 'land bank' of 185 sites across the country on which to build new stores. 30 of these will be open by the end of this year, and another 56 have planning permission. This 'land bank' amounts to 4.5 million square feet of new supermarket space. Compare that with the other supermarket chains, Asda, Sainsbury's and Morrisons who only have 3.7 million square feet of planned store space between them.

The superstore empire wants total domination of Britain's food supply chain. They bid whatever it takes to buy up any potential store sites that come on the market, simply to deny them to their rivals.

NO CHOICE: Supermarkets undercut family-run shops - butchers, grocers and fishmongers - to put them out of business before raising their prices.

The company uses its ever-increasing financial muscle to beat down the local opposition it is increasingly encountering as it takes over yet another town. In the lovely Cotswold town of Stow-on-the-Wold, an application to build a Tesco store had been turned down seven times before the local planning officer urged councillors to approve the proposal. The alternative was to face the heavy costs of an appeal for which each of the councillors could be personally liable. Naturally the council caved in as they generally have been forced to do everywhere. Tesco knows that in civil cases British justice is generally for sale to the highest bidder - ordinary folk simply can't afford the immense legal costs entailed.

Tesco, aided and abetted by lesser supermarket sharks like Asda, Sainsbury's and Morrisons who between them control almost three quarters of the British grocery market, use their monopoly buying power to force farmers and other suppliers to sell at unsustainable prices, driving many to ruin.

The uneconomic prices they force suppliers to accept then enables the store chains to undercut traditional family shops, butchers, grocers and fishmongers, and drive them out of business in town after town.

Having driven everyone else out of the market, the biggest store shark is now devouring the lesser ones.

You would have thought a Labour Government would be defending ordinary shoppers from this approaching big business monopoly exploitation, but that's not the case. The Office of Fair Trading can only wring its hands and do nothing while the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister only pauses from its schemes to concrete over Southern England to repeatedly back Tesco in planning battles with local residents and their elected councillors.

Nothing now stands between Tesco and total control of your shopping bag but the British National Party. We will stop them in their tracks, break up the giant store chains and set free farmers and shoppers alike from the tangling web of monopoly buying and selling power.

Only the BNP will encourage small shopkeepers to return to the high street, to complement a responsible but limited supermarket sector led by companies like Waitrose which is owned by its staff and management.

ON THE DRAWING BOARD: Tesco has a 'land bank' of 185 sites across the country on which to build new stores. That's 4.5 million square feet of new supermarket space waiting to be utilised.

Pipefitters sacked to make way for Poles

TWENTY-THREE Merseyside pipefitters have been made redundant and their jobs given to Polish workers.

The men had been working for Laurence Mechanical Services on the Quinn Glass development in Ellesmere Port before they were told there was no further work for them. But just three days later the contractors took on 20 Polish staff. The workers believe the firm took the decision to get rid of them after they demanded a contract of employment. They claim Polish workers were employed instead of the British ones because they agreed to work for £8 an hour whereas the British pipefitters were on £12 an hour.

Joe Rusk, 59, who has been a site foreman and worked in the business for more than 40 years, said:

"I have never experienced anything like this. We were being told there was nothing more for us and the next thing we know more workers are being taken on. Everybody feels they have been treated very badly."

Not surprisingly a spokesman for contractors, Laurence Mechanical Services, said: "We will not be making any comment at all about this."

POLES APART: No jobs for British pipefitters in Ellesmere Port.

Globalisation means a grim future for the West Midlands

THE cheap labour economies of Asia are having a catastrophic impact on jobs in the West Midlands, business leaders told the annual conference of Coventry Chamber of Commerce last month.

But none of the so-called experts offered any hope of safeguarding the region's industrial future.

Brian Woods-Scawen, chief executive of Coventry, Solihull and Warwickshire Partnership warned delegates that workers in the emerging countries were learning skills at a very fast rate with China producing 600,000 engineering graduates last year.

Stephen Brown, of UK Trade and Investment admitted that Britain was vulnerable because it had one of the most open economies in the world.

If a BNP delegate had been invited, the conference would have been told that the only way to protect West Midlands jobs was to reject globalisation by banning imports of foreign manufactured goods we could make ourselves and stopping the offshoring of British jobs.

RAC follows AA and offshores jobs to India

TWO hundred jobs at RAC's call centres in Bristol are being offshored to India.

An RAC spokeswoman didn't mince her words when she told the BBC why the workers were being laid off: "The work is being offshored because it's cheaper in India."

The move follows in the wake of the AA's offshoring of 160 jobs to India as reported in August's Freedom.

Breaking down by the roadside is a traumatic experience even for seasoned motorists. The possibility of having to explain the predicament to someone thousands of miles away who has difficulty in understanding what is being said, will certainly be a worry to RAC and AA members.

The BNP's advice to motorists is to make sure that your roadside rescue cover is with a company which hasn't offshored British jobs.

80% of UK companies will offshore British jobs

A SURVEY by Global Sourcing Advisers TPI found that four out of five 'large' UK companies plan to offshore jobs to reduce costs over the 24 months. TPI questioned 100 chief executives and found that eighty-one of them were looking to shift business to India, China and Eastern Europe over the next two years.

Epping youngster raises £150 to help defend freedom of speech

ON SUNDAY 2nd October British National Party members from Havering, Redbridge and Epping held another successful tri-branch meeting.

Meeting chairman, Jason Douglas, welcomed attendees old and new, and introduced speakers Alan Bailey, the Havering organiser and Matt Single from Chelmsford.

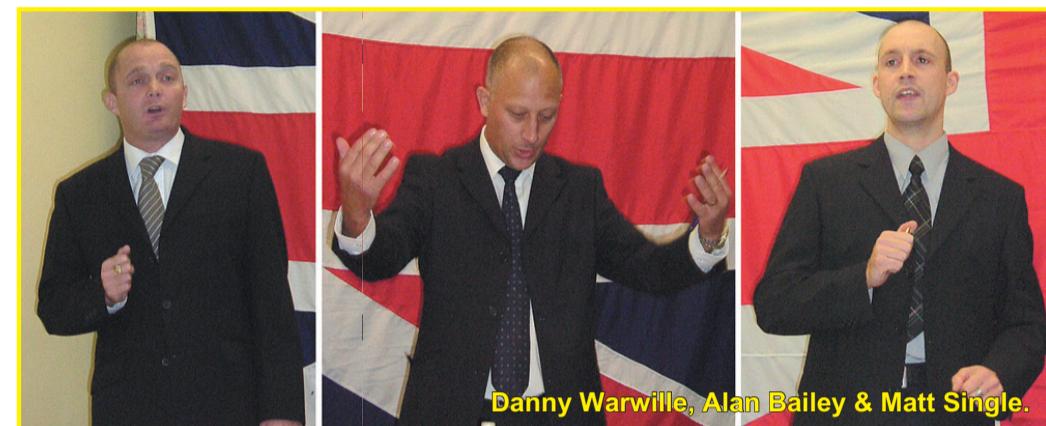

Alan voiced his concern that Britain was becoming a tyrannical police-state while Matt explained the British National Party were involved in a 'marathon' contest rather than a 'sprint' to win influence within the British political arena, and that success would not come without dedication and determination on our behalf.

The main speaker, BNP chairman, Nick Griffin, gave his usual eloquent, thought-provoking and rallying address, detailing how the BNP was not a radical alternative to the old gang parties but a real and VIABLE alternative.

Nick's address however, was not the highlight of the evening. After attending this year's Red White and Blue festival, 12 year old William, the son of Epping organiser, Danny Warville, asked his father if he could take the initiative and attempt to raise some money for the Nick Griffin and Mark Collett legal fund. Danny gave William the 'green-light' and he subsequently went on to organise a sponsored silence amongst his friends which resulted in £150 being raised. The BNP chairman and all at the meeting were visibly moved as William handed over the money and the young man's ingenuity was well rewarded with a thunderous round of applause.

Danny Warville, Alan Bailey & Matt Single.

Lisa takes over the BNP reins in Walsall

THE fund-raising evening for Walsall BNP on October 15th was something of an emotional occasion as it saw long-serving Branch organiser, William Locke, standing down.

Bill has worked tirelessly for Walsall BNP, but after a spell of poor health he has decided he needs to take a break and to spend more time with his wife, Julie, and their new grandchild. He handed over the reins of power to a young lady, Lisa DeSouza, who has all the spirit and energy required to promote the British National Party to the people of Walsall. Lisa has already assembled a team of activists dedicated to working hard on spreading our message of hope and freedom within the town.

Bill's address at the end of the evening was heartfelt making sure that everyone remembered why they were members of the British National Party. Bill and Julie were presented with a bottle of champagne and flowers by Lisa, as the members of Walsall BNP wished their former organiser all the very best for the future.

Nicholla rallies her troops to alert the public

ON 10th of October Falkirk BNP Organiser, Nicholla Ritchie, and seventeen of her colleagues answered the call from worried residents about the rise in attempted child abductions in Bathgate.

FALKIRK: Nicholla Ritchie and her team of activists in Bathgate.

The team leafleted the whole area alerting the public that the police needed their help in identifying the culprits of no less than three separate attempted abductions in the vicinity. The activity was very well received by locals and as word of the campaign spread further afield, calls supporting the BNP were received from Denny, Falkirk and Grangemouth.

The October fund-raising challenge to BNP units

OCTOBER SAW the first ever BNP Fund-Raising Challenge after recently appointed National Fund-Raiser, Sharon Ebanks, named the day and challenged every BNP branch and group in the country to lay on a local fund-raising event and to see who could raise the most money.

Sharon then put her money where her mouth was by organising a social evening for Birmingham members which raised well over £3,000, as well as being the driving force behind an Internet appeal on the BNP Members' Forum that raised a further £1,000. The cyberspace side of the day was also helped by a talented pro-BNP rock band, Battlecry, who donated a specially recorded song, 'We Are One'.

A CLASSIC: David Jones recites Kipling's poem 'The Stranger'.

KNOWLEDGE: A quiz in London helped raise £440 for the Challenge.

Winners of the Challenge were Stockport branch, whose dinner and entertainment evening raised a magnificent £4,100. Guests were treated to performances by several talented singers, a brilliant solo saxophonist, and a recitation of poems by Kipling from BNP Data Protection officer David Jones.

There was also the premier of a play put on by members from Blackburn. 'Granny Jackboots' – an account of the great joys brought to elderly white residents by multi-cultural diversity – went down very well indeed, and is expected to play to a much bigger audience at next year's Red-White-and-Blue family festival.

Nationwide, the Fund-Raising Challenge raised more than £11,000. Thanking Sharon for her initiative, and all those who took part, BNP national treasurer, John Walker, said that he was particularly pleased that so much was raised on the first effort. "Because the idea was new only a few branches and groups took up the Challenge. Its success shows how hard the ones who did take part worked. I'm sure next year a lot more will get involved, now the pioneers have shown what can be done."

Trafalgar Club dinner in Norfolk

WHILE some ethnic minorities in Birmingham marked Trafalgar Day with mayhem and murder, a record number of members from the BNP's Trafalgar Club celebrated the 200th anniversary of Nelson's great victory in much more traditional British style.

More than one hundred members and their guests enjoyed a superb four course dinner in an exclusive Norfolk hotel, just a few miles from Burnham Thorpe, the birthplace of one of the greatest ever Englishmen.

The evening saw the presentation of 'thank you' prizes to a number of first, second, third and even fifth year members of the BNP's top-notch regular donors' club.

Master of Ceremonies, Brian Galloway, thanked out-going 'TC' secretary Jean Griffin, who, having worked so hard to build the Club up to the point where it has more than four hundred members, is now handing over the growing workload to a new administration team.

The key after-dinner speech was given by BNP chairman Nick Griffin, who gave an inspiring address on the dogged determination and courage of the officers and men on board

Nelson's fleet - which had to endure hours of devastating broadsides from the French and Spanish ships at Trafalgar before their twin columns crashed through the enemy lines and could begin to fire back.

He went on to point out the similarity with the position faced by the activists of the British National Party, who have had to endure years of smears, underhand tricks and harassment from our old party opponents and their allies in the media:

"We've faced enemy broadside after enemy broadside. But still, just like the ships in Nelson's fleet, we just keep moving forward, getting closer and closer to the increasingly frightened enemy."

With many of the guests staying in the area overnight, there was also a record attendance at the now traditional Sunday morning historical trip. This very special year, the TC outing was to Nelson's birthplace, and to other local landmarks intimately connected with the great man. Fresh from what he described as a "crash course in Nelson history" while helping to narrate the stunning BNPTV DVD 'England Expects', Nick Griffin acted as tour guide.

The tour around the north Norfolk countryside ended at the fishing port of Burnham Overy Staithes, where Nelson had his first glimpse of the sea. A wonderful weekend was at an end, but the Trafalgar Club's outstanding contribution to the advance of the BNP is certain to continue.

Those who inspire our ideology: No.5 GK Chesterton

A voice from over three-quarters of a century ago pointing the way to a sustainable future.

by Steve Johnson

GILBERT KEITH Chesterton (1874-1936), essayist, poet, wit and committed Roman Catholic, is important to British Nationalism for two reasons.

The first is political. Building on the work of his friend, Hilaire Belloc, Chesterton was the second of the great founders of Distributism, the real Third Way, a genuine alternative to the failed ideologies of Socialism and Capitalism. Chesterton's Outline of Sanity, written in 1926, remains well worth reading today, a voice from over three-quarters of a century in the past still pointing the only viable way to a sustainable and stable future.

Moreover, Chesterton went further, moving from word to deed. In September 1926 he founded a political movement, the Distributist League. Chesterton's wit and style - as when he compared being offered the choice only between Socialism and Capitalism to being forced to choose "between all men going into monasteries and a few men having harems" - helped the League to enjoy a period of success. However the League fell foul of the besetting sin of politics, internal factional strife, and it was left to a later generation of Nationalists to rediscover its ideas.

Chesterton's second source of

importance to us today is as a source of inspiration. In 1911 he wrote The Ballad of the White Horse, an epic poem about the resistance of English people to immigration a thousand years earlier, when King Alfred saved our homeland from the Danes. This rings down the decades as a moving and uplifting reminder that every immigrant invasion of our islands down the millennia has been stoutly resisted, to such effect that modern genetics shows that we are still overwhelmingly of ancient Stone Age native stock. It's a rallying cry to us not to despair in the face of apparently overwhelming odds.

For others before us faced worse, and won. "There was not English armour left, nor any English thing. When Alfred came to Athelney, to be an English King", as Chesterton described the dark days when barbarian immigrants ravaged the land, burning and slaying, and all that was left of Free England was a few desperate men hiding in a Somerset swamp. Alfred too almost despaired, wondering as we do now if "that which is for ever is, or if our hearts shall break with bliss, seeing the stranger go?" Fearing that "he read, writ with an iron pen, that God had wearied of Wessex men, and given their country, field and fen, to the devils of the sea".

How Alfred found inspiration and hope, and rallied the native people of Britain to fight back and win, Chesterton's poem tells in words that ring in the heart of every true patriot. It should inspire us too to "go gathering Christian men" - and anyone else today who is British - "to die in a battle, God knows when. By God, but I know why..."

landfill available means it is vital that we try and adopt a more responsible INSPIRATION TO US ALL: GK Chesterton's Outline of Sanity, written in 1926, still remains well worth reading today.

Help the environment - recycle household waste

by Clive Wakley

EACH year over 100 million tonnes of rubbish is generated from industrial, commercial and household sources in Britain and the biggest problem with this waste is its disposal.

At present, two-thirds of all waste is conveyed to landfill sites for disposal which causes the unnecessary pollution of our soil as most of this waste could be recycled.

Much more must be done to reduce and recycle the waste we produce and even small changes can make a big difference. Make the most of any new recycling collection points, segregated waste collection and the provision of centralised 'dump' sites which accept bulky household refuse and garden waste.

The increasing cost of raw materials in today's world combined with an escalating burden on the decreasing and sustainable approach to the way that we dispose of our waste.

Increased recycling, recovery and reuse will reduce our requirement for new raw materials, saving a further depletion of what are often non-renewable resources.

Apart from the obvious, separating out paper, glass and metal from domestic waste here are some useful tips that every household should adopt.

* Reuse aluminium foil and plastic bags.

* Buy products such as washing powder in refillable containers.

* Don't buy over packaged goods.

* Use proper shopping bags rather than disposable carrier bags.

* Always buy rechargeable batteries, as opposed to disposable ones.

* Donate old clothes and books to charity shops.

* Buy goods made from recycled materials whenever possible.

HELP: Recycling household waste reduces the pressure on Britain's dwindling number of landfill sites.

SALLY WOOD Straight talking!

Crime and Race

THERE WAS an uncomfortable headline in a recent issue of The Guardian newspaper. "Abort all Black babies and cut crime".

The report concerned the American politician, William Bennett, who had made this suggestion, but I don't think for one moment he was advocating such an extreme measure. He was just trying to stimulate debate on an issue which is never discussed - the link between race and crime. In the United States the statistics are stark. A Black person is 8 times as likely to murder and 10 times as likely to commit a robbery as a White person. In this country ethnic crime figures are kept from public scrutiny, but the excuse for 'Black Crime' is always attributed to racism on the part of White people which has condemned Black people to a life of poverty. When I see members of our ethnic communities driving around in BMWs and sporting their designer clothes with plenty of bling, I'm not quite convinced about this poverty argument.

As a child my family didn't have a car. My father was always saving up for one but never quite managed to achieve that goal. Our fridge comprised a bucket in the pantry filled with cold water where the milk was placed in summer. My dresses were all bought with deep hems so that they could be let down as I grew, and our home had no central heating. In the winter we huddled around the fire in the only warm room in the house and in the summer, with no fire to heat the water, my mother would carry buckets of hot water from a copper in the kitchen up the stairs to fill the bath.

Yet although we had very little, it would never have occurred to us to turn to a life of crime. It just wasn't in our nature. It has often been remarked that amongst the White community there is a tendency for crime to run in families. The teaching in the 1960's was that we are all born a blank slate, a tabula rasa, and that crime ran in families because sons looked up to their fathers as role models. It is now realised, since work that has been carried out on identical twins that much of our behaviour is genetically determined and present at birth.

It is therefore just as feasible that there is a genetic component for this criminal tendency within families. If this is the case could there not also be a genetic predisposition towards criminal behaviour within some cultures more than within others?

But why are they here?

LISTENING to that bete noir of mine 'Any Questions', I was not surprised to hear the issue of Trevor Phillips' speech on segregated communities being raised.

The team members appeared to reach a consensus that there was not much wrong with separate communities. They cited the Orthodox Jewish and Chinese communities of London whose people are friendly, law abiding and successful, but who tend to live in their own close-knit communities. David Willetts, who was one of the panellists and is reputed to be so clever that he has the nickname of 'two brains', could not, even with all that extra neural activity grasp the fundamental question that although they may be all of those things, what is the actual point of them being here?

This led me to on to imagine a scenario where the situation was reversed and thousands of English people decided to up root and go and live in an expensive part of Beijing. They opened up their own quaint little shops selling English goods and once a year on May Day they took part in an English festival of maypole and morris dancing.

The Chinese people would all come and watch out of curiosity and think it all very fine, but would then scratch their heads in puzzlement. 'Why', they would say, 'do they need to come and live here and displace us to put on this show. Surely if we want to see the English way of life we can take a holiday there or they could tour our country giving cultural displays or hold trade fairs?'

Which brings me back to this country and to the separate communities here. They may be friendly and law abiding but still they are occupying valuable chunks of our real estate and we have had to move over to make room for them. Could they not equally do whatever they are doing here in their own country?

My young granddaughter must have been lying in bed pondering on the meaning of life the other day because she came rushing down the stairs to ask, 'Granny what am I doing here and what are we all doing here?'

One might equally ask the same question of those friendly ethnic enclaves which are now situated within our midst.

What a way to treat a war hero

THIS SUMMER the body of a 22 year-old war hero was exhumed from its resting place of 62 years so that a developer could cash in on the buoyant property market in the Fenlands.

Tim Hargrave was killed on September 28th 1943. He was serving with 57 Squadron, Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve flying Lancaster bombers from their base in East Kirkby in Lincolnshire. He was buried in the cemetery at the Baptist Chapel at Upwell in Norfolk.

BEFORE: Upwell Baptist Chapel and sacred graveyard.

AFTER: Malaki Udensi's profitable property development.

The chapel dates from 1840 and its substantial cemetery was famed as the only Non-Conformist Cemetery in the county. But now Tim Hargrave and his headstone have gone and hundreds of gravestones have been bulldozed and smashed by property developer, Malaki Udensi.

The Disused Burial Grounds Act should safeguard cemeteries, tombstones, monuments and memorials but in the unseemly rush to build new homes for the mushrooming population it appears that anything is fair game for the developers, including the final resting place of one of Britain's brave pilots.

DISGRACE: Smashed and bulldozed gravestones and family memorials are now just a pile of rubble.

BNP campaign for a Miners' Memorial Day

NO ONE knows how many men and boys have died doing their duty for their country in our coal mines. 90,000 died in mine disasters alone in the sixty years before WW1, and including coal dust related diseases such as chronic bronchitis and pneumoconiosis, the total casualty figure is well over a million.

This Labour Government has just given the police their own Police Memorial Day for officers killed in the line of duty, and the British National Party believes that there should also be a Miners' Memorial Day.

There needs to be a special occasion when the country remembers all those miners who gave their lives miles under the ground, hewing out the coal that was the vital energy source in Britain of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

TURNING THE CLOCK BACK: Natural gas from the North Sea which has sustained us for the last 30 years has nearly run out which means a return of the gasometer, blighting the landscape of every British town and city.

BLACKOUT BRITAIN and all because Labour and the Tories sold off our greatest energy asset HOMES throughout the country could face five months of blackouts if it's a cold winter because our supplies of natural gas from the North Sea have all but run out.

Just 30 years ago, thanks to British expertise, a huge supply of gas and oil was discovered under the North Sea. It should have taken care of our energy needs until the end of the 21st century years, but because both Labour and Conservative Governments sold off this valuable natural asset for short term gain, Britain is now forced to rely this winter on gas imported through a pipeline from Europe under the Channel.

Energy experts fear that the storage facilities in which the imported oil will be kept will not be able to cope with a very cold winter, leaving no gas supply for heating and lighting homes, no fuel for the power stations and none of Britain's factories able to operate.

Since 1976 Britain's gas supplies have come direct from the North Sea, making redundant the huge gasometers that once dominated the landscape of every town and city. Now they will have to return. Local authorities have been told to make land available for a massive gas storage building programme because of the country's new reliance on imported gas.

The expense of providing these facilities and for storing the imported gas, coupled with the higher cost of such supplies from Europe, has led to dramatic price rises over the past two years.

The average household power bill has risen by more than a third - around £200, with the high price of imported gas also placing an added burden on small businesses and our public services.

The future of Britain was in our own hands

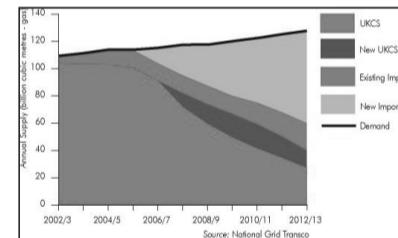

TONY BENN: As Energy Minister, he fought to keep North Sea Oil under the control of the British Government.

ON 18 JUNE, 1975, the first oil from the North Sea arrived at the Isle of Grain refinery carried by tanker from the Hamilton Brothers' Argyll field.

The new energy secretary, Tony Benn, was there to welcome it and was presented with a small bottle of the 'black gold' to commemorate the occasion. He held the bottle in the air and announced to waiting journalists: "I hold the future of Britain in my hand."

Within a few years the country was self-sufficient in oil, with a North Sea oil development fund, and the British National Oil Corporation.

The BNOC looked after Britain's interests, resisting takeover bids from the huge oil multi-nationals. The Government was in a strong position because it had the oil that everybody else wanted.

"North Sea Oil would have transformed our economy, averting the downward spiral of UK manufacturing"

Prudently managed and under total British control, North Sea oil would have catered for our energy needs for another 100 years. It would have also transformed our economy, averting the downward spiral of UK manufacturing, as well as the collapse of the shipbuilding and the car industries.

Instead Tony Benn's own Labour Government and the subsequent Thatcher regime sold off our greatest asset, taking away forever the option for future generations of Britons to be self-sufficient in their energy needs.

This year, for the first time in 30 years, Britain is having to import gas and by 2009 there won't even be enough oil coming from the North Sea to meet our requirements.

Never mind the history feel the sympathy

A NEW £10 million Museum and Centre for the Understanding of Transatlantic Slavery will be paid for with taxpayers' money and a £1.7 grant from the National Lottery.

Original promotional material for the museum slammed 'Liverpool's shameful role in the slave trade' but this was changed after local historians pointed out that Liverpool wasn't involved because slaves went directly from Africa to the Americas.

DISPLAYS: Were originally going to highlight "Liverpool's shameful role in the slave trade."

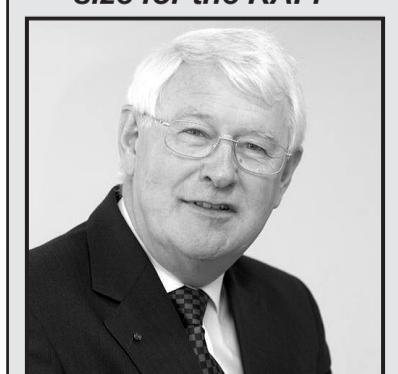

Not deterred by this historical detail, the museum's bosses said it would now also cover issues such as human rights, reparations, racial discrimination and cultural change.

The museum will open in 2007 just in time for the 200th anniversary of the abolition of the slave trade and a resource centre will open 2 years later.

The Quote of the Month

THE MINISTRY of Defence has slashed by 75% the flying hours for students with the University Air Squadrans and is closing down UAS facilities at 9 airfields making 21 RAF staff redundant. Announcing the cuts, Don Touhig MP, Under Secretary of State for Defence said it:

"... would increase the effectiveness and efficiency of the University Air Squadron programme, by making it the right shape and size for the RAF."

DON TOUHIG: Is he insulting our intelligence, or does he really believe cuts improve efficiency?

McCarthyism revisited

CASE STUDY: Carlisle, Pennsylvania, March 1952.

"It had been reported in the evening newspaper that she might be a member of the Communist Party. The next morning when she arrived at work her superiors were waiting for her. She was told to hand over her keys, her ID and any property belonging to the company. She was told that she had been suspended from work, that she must not speak to or contact any of her work colleagues and she was escorted from the building. Four months later she was told that her job within the company no longer existed and that her employment had been terminated."

WHAT A chilling example of the excesses of McCarthyism, the witchhunt of people who supported the Communist Party in America in the early years of the 1950s.

Over 400 Americans went to jail without receiving a fair trial because no lawyers were prepared to risk their career defending suspected Communists. Defence witnesses at these trials were threatened, bullied and abused and even accused of being Communist sympathisers themselves.

Overall 9,500 civil servants were dismissed and 15,000 forced to resign; 600 teachers lost their jobs and many actors and script-writers were unable to work again because they had been associated with Communism. Employers were even ordered to hand over lists of workers who might be sympathetic to Communism and in 1954 the Communist Party was eventually banned altogether.

These were all direct legacies of McCarthyism but the biggest effect was the anti-democratic atmosphere that McCarthyism created. Anyone who voiced concern for the poor was automatically branded a 'Communist'.

Thankfully, McCarthyism in America is no more. It was defeated because of a vigorous campaign by journalists to expose its hidden agenda to deny free speech to those who opposed government policy or whose views were unfashionable at the time.

But sadly, today, a new version of McCarthyism is alive and well and has a vice like grip on Britain. Take the case study above and change Pennsylvania to Cumbria, 1952 to 2005 and Communist Party to British National Party and you have the account of my wife, Tina's, ordeal at the hands of her employers, the North Cumbria Mental Health NHS Trust, after our local paper reported that she wouldn't be standing as a BNP candidate at the General Election.

Just like its forerunner in the United States fifty years ago, this new British version of McCarthyism has created an anti-democratic atmosphere where anyone voicing concern over immigration is automatically labelled a 'racist'.

But unlike in 1950's America, our journalists are not campaigning against today's McCarthyism. Many, in fact, actually support the witchhunt against members of the British National Party, while others stay silent, cowed by the fear of losing their jobs.

...and still there's a softly, softly police approach

BIRMINGHAM: Three hundred police officers in riot gear patrolling the streets. One dead, thirty-five people in hospital, three with gunshot wounds, four with knife injuries and one with a fractured skull. But before any murder investigation could get under way, Police chiefs had to meet with MORE THAN 80 COMMUNITY LEADERS to explain the remit of their inquiries.

Highlighting issues

A BIG congratulations to Freedom which is going from strength to strength. This newspaper brings the truth and the injustice within easy reach and is clearing a path for mainstream readership with enlightening exposé journalism and a touch of Private Eye satire too!

With a bit of reappraisal and moderation the British National Party could capitalise on its substantial progress and would stand a better chance of reaching out further to addressing many people's concerns and feelings of disillusionment. People feel powerless over issues such as overcrowding, enclaves, multi-culturalism, positive discrimination, foreign labour, erosion of our religion, community, language and traditions.

Women are particularly interested in the best education for their children. They don't want their child to be the only white child in a Central London black school and they want immigrant children struggling with English to be streamed so they don't hold British children back. If the BNP can become known for focusing on these sort of issues, the Party will make more of an impact at the local elections in May.

Mr. R. Allason, email letter.

More PC policing

Greater Manchester Police are at it again. They are putting on extra 'high visibility' patrols in the Muslim areas of Cheetham Hill and Crumpsall to protect homes while residents are praying during the festival of Ramadan.

Yet just one mile away in another area of Manchester, residents are left alone to live their lives in constant fear of violent marauding street gangs who roam the streets unchecked and are free to intimidate residents with impunity.

Every Sunday in Collyhurst, which is a mainly Christian area, the local police station is closed all day and you never see a policeman on the beat.

Obviously Greater Manchester Police aren't concerned that these residents might be burgled or get their car stolen whilst at church!

Mr. D Adams, Manchester.

Also a security threat

CHINESE expansion does not just pose an economic threat to Britain, it also poses a very real security threat.

As China expands, it is demanding, and buying, more and more oil thus pushing up prices. As oil heads past $70 towards $100 per barrel, many of the nations profiting by this are financial supporters of militant Islamic fundamentalism.

Higher oil prices courtesy of China means more money for bombers. More money for bombs, and more money for the killers of the children in Beslan and those in Madrid and London.

Think about it. If you buy Chinese products, you are helping to fund the destruction of the Western world.

By encouraging more Chinese imports, this Labour Government and our business leaders are committing treason. They are boosting funds for those who want to destroy our Christian way of life.

The back of the queue

I WAS recently at the Chest Hospital in Bonner Street, Bethnal Green to receive treatment and was amazed to see a large sign behind reception which said:

"Patients who come by ambulance, and PATIENTS WHO COME WITH INTERPRETERS, will be seen first."

The only conclusion that one can come to is that the health needs of people who can't speak English are being put before the needs of ordinary Britons.

I did question my doctor about this and she said that the policy was to save me money. Apparently, as a taxpayer, I pay for the interpreter service provided for these new arrivals and if they bring their interpreter with them when requiring treatment, 'the bill mounts if they are kept waiting'.

It has been said before, and it will be said again . . . We must be mad!

Geoffrey Hawkins, Barking.

Help advise the BBC!

I AM just filling in my BBC Advisory Council form, so that I am able to influence the decision making process at the BBC.

I would urge all members to do likewise. Applications are available from: Freepost, BBC English Regions. No stamp is required and no extra address needs to be added to this single line. You can also get a form by calling 0800 0687060 and asking for an application form to become a BBC advisor.

According to the Beeb, the areas of knowledge and experience that will especially assist your application are in the field of minority or ethnic communities and issues affecting sexual orientation, so you know what to put on your form!

Once accepted you will be able to advise the BBC on the content of their news programmes for television and radio. The more we get on, the more we can influence them more towards a nationalist perspective.

Ralph Ellis, Vale Royal BNP.

Co-op put Poles first

MY SON recently sent his CV to the new Co-op warehouse in Coventry after friends, who work there, told us more staff were being taken on.

My son had the right credentials and he was very hopeful of securing a job, but he never even got an interview. Now we have been told that all 30 jobs have been filled and they have all gone to Polish workers.

So much for the Co-op's claim to be there for the community and that they provide local jobs for local people.

Gary Moore, Coventry.

Stop this mosque plan

PLEASE can the BNP advise what can be done here in Stoke on Trent to oppose or at the very least delay plans for the building of a mosque currently being rushed through in a prime location in Hanley.

The Labour Council, in order to curry favour with the Muslim community, are only asking a peppercorn rent and offering a 125 year lease. All the British people of Hanley will have to look forward to is an 85 foot minaret, floodlit after dark, and a 60 decibel loud hailer calling the faithful to prayer three times a day.

The Council are trying to push this through quietly, so the public need to be alerted.

S. Harrington, Stoke on Trent

AS Lee Haggan is one of the best known singer-songwriters on the fast growing pro-BNP music scene, his first album, Time To Make A Stand, has been eagerly awaited. Well, the wait has been worthwhile. The era of nationalist music being dominated by often badly performed and produced post-punk rock growling is definitely over.

The best way to review the album is to take a brief look at each of the tracks:

1 - BRITISH REVOLUTION: A lively country-rock riff, British Revolution is an upbeat song with a stirring appeal to young Britons to join the patriotic ranks. "Come all you brave young Britons of courage stout and bold...". Popular amongst young nationalists, great start to the album.

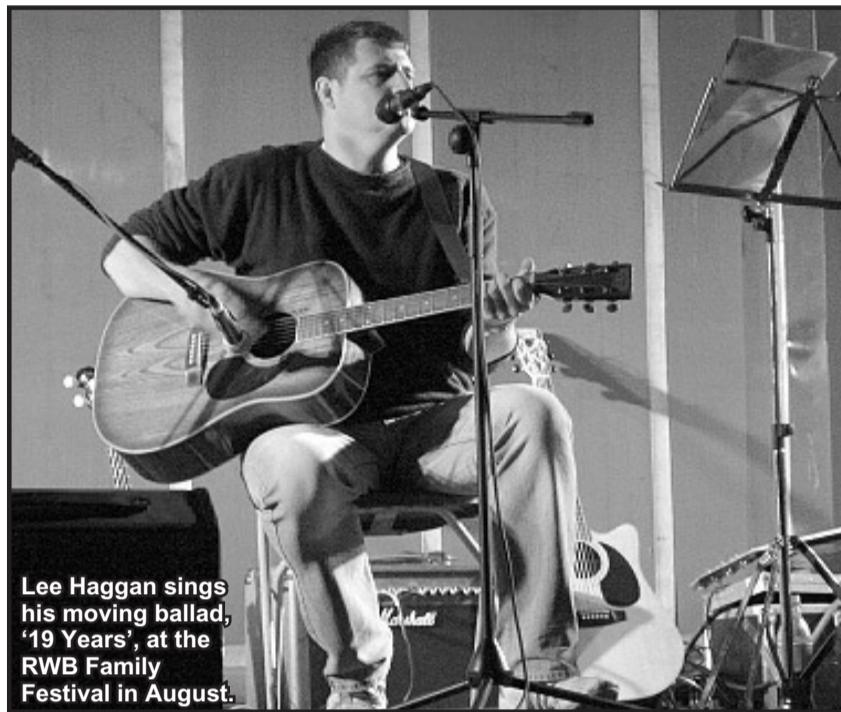

2 - THIS LAND: New version of a well-known folk song. Great acoustic number celebrating the British Isles. "As I went walking, on the Pennine Highway, I saw above me, that English skyway, I saw below me, the Calder Valley, this land was made for you and me". Great sing-along song.

3 - WILL YOU REMEMBER?: Haunting ballad, written and sung by David Hannam. About an-old time veteran who fears that he, and that which he fought for, will be forgotten. A moving song. "Will you remember me in times of peace and war, will you remember me and what I'm fighting for? Though just an old-time soldier, you've heard it all before, will you remember me at all?"

4 - HAL AN TOW: An ancient folk song celebrating May Day. 'Hal an Tow' means, 'The Sun has Risen' in Cornish. Guest female vocalist Sam Joyce covers this track with great ease in this modernised version.

5 - THE MENACE: The most delightfully politically-incorrect song on the album. Great uplifting song about the domination of many of our cities and towns by foreign cultures alien to Britain. Great non-pc opening line which will make you jump from your seat, "You've heard about the Yardies, drugs and guns from overseas, you've heard about the Triads and the pimps and all the thieves". Great stuff.

Music critic, John Milnes, reviews Lee Haggan's sensational debut album on Great White Records

Lee Haggan sings his moving ballad, '19 Years', at the RWB Family Festival in August.

6 - FIDDLER'S ELBOW.

Medley of Irish & American folk instrumental folk songs, meant to be played with fiddler as lead, but absent intentionally in this version. Cleverly arranged.

7 - A VISION, NOT A DREAM:

Possibly the most moving track on the album. Written by Nick Griffin, with music arranged by Lee Haggan, this song relates the senselessness of the slaughter of the First World War. The writer envisions a future where the young men of Europe stand side by side to free our homelands from the threats which threaten to overwhelm us.

8 - OUR TOWNS WILL BE OUR OWN: About the plight of white families in northern towns where we are sliding into minority status. Great track, written by Nick Griffin, sung passionately by Lee.

9 - NINETEEN YEARS:

Written and sung by Lee. A hugely popular song paying tribute to Gavin Hopley, who was murdered in an anti-white racist attack in Oldham. This is a haunting folky-ballad with great lyrics: "But Gavin Hopley will not die, we will keep on asking why, we'll keep his memory alive, and for his sake this land will thrive". It's a beautiful tribute.

10 - ALL STAND TOGETHER:

Another hugely popular song/anthem. Subject of a debate on the BNP Members' forum as to whether it should become the official party anthem. Sung by Sam Joyce it's sure to be remembered as one of the greats off the album.

11 - OUR HOMELAND:

A fitting finale, and a call for action and unity to the growing ranks of the BNP. "Come all you lads and lasses, come and join our fight, to win back our lost freedoms, and put old wrongs to right".

This is a must-hear for music lovers, and those who want a great introduction to the new nationalist music now being produced. A great gift for friends, relatives and loved ones. Produced by new record label, Great White Records, and available now from Excalibur.

Meeting launches BNP in Wolverhampton

by Rob Purcell

PROGRESS in the Black Country region of the West Midlands was in evidence on 25th October at the first meeting of Wolverhampton BNP.

The new group was formed last month at the behest of local activists and the Black Country organiser Simon Smith, was more than happy to delegate responsibility for the BNP's newest group to popular local activist Steve Haddon.

The launch meeting was well attended with more than 40 activists, supporters and curious members of the public keen to listen to the BNP message and assist the nationalist cause.

Proceedings were opened by the group's Fundholder Barry Miller, as he introduced Steve to an enthusiastic audience. Steve thanked those in attendance for their support and expressed a desire to see growth in local membership and an increase in activity. He also indicated his intention to target council seats in the area and put the City of Wolverhampton firmly on the BNP map. West Midlands Regional Organiser Simon Darby, and BNP Chairman Nick Griffin, were the guest speakers.

the BNP, but they didn't reckon on our swift rebuttal leaflet which told voters a few home truths about the Lib-Dems themselves and probably scuppered any chance they had of winning this election.

We canvassed the whole area (something we have never done before), half by phone canvass and the other half by knocking doors. We managed to speak to nearly 70% of the people of Groby, and as the election went on more and more people began to indicate they would be voting BNP or at the very least considering it. British National Party candidate Bob Crane, was standing for the first time and was very well received. He pledged to continue the excellent work begun in the area and improve our vote next time.

The Groby result continues our recent successful run in Leicestershire, maintaining our healthy share of the vote which bodes well for the European Elections in 2009 and the BNP's chance of getting an MEP elected for the East Midlands.

looked decidedly glum.
"I don't think he appreciated our hard-hitting local leaflets called Stanley Matters and the reworked Miners' Memorial Day campaign leaflet we put out. It must have rattled him," Kevin told Freedom.

It appears the local Labour council was rattled too. There was a forum on the council website on which the by-election was the hot topic. Initially the postings were all from Labour supporters but when they started appearing from people intending to vote BNP, the forum was shut down. The website announced:

"We are, as a public authority, prohibited by Section 2 of the Local Government Act 1986, of publishing any material which, in whole or in part, appears to be designed to affect public support for a political party."

Isn't it strange that they were quite happy publishing the material when it was all in support of the Labour candidate?

Pendle BNP prepares for next year's local elections

ON Wednesday 5th October, forty members and guests attended a meeting of Pendle BNP. It was chaired by Trevor Dawson, who reported on leafleting activities within Pendle and spoke on the need for everyone to start getting over the message of the British National Party in their wards in preparation for next year's local elections.

TREVOR DAWSON: Chaired the October meeting of Pendle BNP.

Following the interval, during which everyone enjoyed an excellent buffet, the chairman introduced the new North West regional organiser David Joines, to the audience.

He spoke on the need for members to become active within local politics and the need for all homes in the wards being fought in Pendle to receive a visit from their prospective candidates to dispel the myths about the BNP put out by the media.

David also took the opportunity to relay to members the events surrounding the invitation by the BBC for him to appear on Question Time. It was a turn of events which he believes may suggest a slow but definite change of heart within the Corporation towards the BNP.

There was a lively question and answer session before the meeting was brought to a close by the infamous Pendle BNP 'raffle'!

Best party bag EVER!

CUMBRIA'S fund-raising challenge took place at the Wigton home of Paul and Debbie Stafford where BNP members from Carlisle, Maryport and Workington raised £132.

It was an excellent afternoon and evening social with a sumptuous buffet and non-stop showing of BNPTV DVDs.

For one lucky couple there was the ultimate 'party bag' when they were presented with a DVD player at the end of the evening.

Salford's October meeting doesn't disappoint

by Gary Chadwick

IT HAD been billed as one of Salford British National Party's best evenings to date and the October meeting did not disappoint.

Salford Organiser Tom Cavanagh, after welcoming the new members, announced that the December meeting would be an evening for the family with Father Christmas in attendance to give out presents.

The main speaker for the evening was Mark Collett who spoke about the many trials and tribulations faced when speaking the truth about what is going on in our country today.

The final speaker of the evening was North West Regional Organiser David Joines, who asked everyone to become more active and help the BNP become more well known in Salford. David announced that a detailed canvassing and leafleting instruction pack would be available shortly to assist any Groups or Units contesting local elections.

EPPING: BNP councillor, Pat Richardson, hands over the 400 signature petition calling for the reinstatement of her council colleague, Terry Farr.

Resisting New Labour's diversity brainwashing

THE STANDARDS Board's suspension of Epping BNP councillor, Terry Farr, for refusing to attend 'diversity training' has back-fired with 400 of his constituents in Loughton signing a petition to get him reinstated.

BNP councillor, Pat Richardson, who handed in the petition to council officers, told Freedom.

"This episode has raised the profile of the BNP group on the council and polarized support behind us.

"Diversity training is something that the chattering classes might believe is essential, but for most people it's just mind bending to promote Britain's ethnic minorities. The vast majority of local people applaud Terry's stand against this sort of brainwashing."

HEXHAM: The Freedom team at their stall by Meal Market and Fore Street.

North East sales team leads the way

HEXHAM, an ancient market town in a beautiful and very historic part of the Tyne Valley, was the latest venue for the North East's now famous Freedom street sales.

Arriving at 10.30am on Tuesday 11th October, the weekly market day, one team set up a small stand on the junction of Meal Market and Fore Street (the busy shopping pedestrian thoroughfare between the bus station and the market), while another team went leafleting.

The response from the public was very good with a number of customers admitting they had voted for the English Democrats out of sheer desperation at the General Election. Even the local police were very friendly but politely declined a complimentary copy of Freedom for the staff canteen.

Three days later on Friday 14th the team were in Gateshead. They set up the stall at 10.15am and had sold 50 copies of Freedom before midday.

October also saw papersales in Newcastle upon Tyne, Blaydon, Benwell, Blakelaw, Denton, Jarrow, Durham City and Blyth as the North East sales team leads the way in promoting the BNP in the towns and cities of its region.

IMMIGRATION?

OPEN YOUR EYES!

According to Britain's leading population experts, the native British people will be a minority in this country by about 2060. This means thousands of immigrants and 'so-called' tourists' pouring into Britain every year on ships, trains, planes and lorries. This is not just happening in the big cities like Leicester and Peterborough, the old policies are giving our country away!

In mere hours and often anti-British race-tracks and race attacks, these immigrants are forced to anything that is British. This is not just happening in the big cities like Leicester and Peterborough, the old policies are giving our country away!

The Government is going ahead with plans to build 200,000 new homes in the Green Belt to cope with the increase in the UK's population. One million new immigrants are coming to Britain every year. Invite to Paris confirms BNP's shift into the political premier league

THE message on the backdrop of the BNP display stand at the huge Bleu-Blanc-Rouge (Blue, White, Red) festival held by the Front National just outside Paris in October read "Two Parties One Passion - Freedom".

The 'BBR', as our French counterparts call their magnificent two-day showcase event, has been banned by the left-wing mayor of the French capital for the last three years. This year, however, Jean-Marie Le Pen's party was able to book a major exhibition and conference centre just outside Paris, so the event was back on. Many thousands of French patriots travelled from all over their country to support the FN, which opposes immigration, globalisation and the way in which the EU is destroying the freedom and sovereignty of the nations of Europe.

More than a hundred stalls allowed FN officials and volunteers from all over France to show off their local delicacies and traditional products. A particular favourite with members of the BNP delegation was the champagne stall which donated three bottles of Le Pen champagne, in stunning blue, red and white glass, which will feature as a prize in a future British National Lottery draw. As well as all the eating, drinking and activities for children, the FN also laid on a number of big political events over the weekend.

These included French presidential race runner-up Jean-Marie Le Pen's keynote speech, and also a series of panel discussions. One of these, chaired by Front National Secretary-General Carl Lang, dealt with the issue of social justice and nationalist economic and social policies.

In addition to contributions by well-known FN officials, this event was addressed by BNP Chairman Nick Griffin, who delighted the guests by delivering his short speech on the issue in French.

Attending the BBR as officially invited guests is another 'first' for the British National Party, and is another welcome sign of our continued shift into the political premier league. The chance to meet with anti-EU MEPs both from the Front National and several other European countries was particularly valuable.

Anyone for frog's legs?

Please help us prepare for the 2006 local elections

NEXT YEAR is a very important year for the British National Party and that is why we need to be up and running on January 1st, ready to take our 'Referendum Campaign' for the May 4th local council elections to the British people.

Usually during the months of January and February, BNP administration staff and organisers are snowed under processing the avalanche of BNP membership renewals that come in during these first two months of the year. This means that our local election campaigning doesn't really get started until the beginning of March, so in many cases full leafleting and canvassing of the wards we are contesting is not always completed. This year we would ask as many BNP members as possible to renew for 2006 this month.

If you can help us in this vital task it will mean that the huge workload expected in January and February can be tackled much earlier. It also means that vital funds needed for the local elections are in place so that leaflets, posters and other campaign material can be prepared and printed in December rather than in March. The public are very worried about the growth of Islam in Britain but Labour, the Tories and the Liberal Democrats are too frightened of losing the Muslim vote to echo these concerns. The British National Party is the only party brave enough to speak out about the threat posed to our Western and Christian values by this Middle-Eastern based fanaticism.

Freedom is producing leaflets and posters to make voters aware that May 4th 2006 is their chance to voice their concern on the growth of Islam in Britain. Our Referendum Day campaign material needs to start going out in January and YOU can help us to do this by renewing your BNP membership today.

Renew your BNP membership during November
